Independent Telephone Operating Companies by States

This section lists every city and town in the United States having a telephone exchange of commercial size—other than those associated with the Bell Operating Companies.

In this compilation of non-Bell telephone company exchanges, the listing is arranged by state and then alphabetically by community where the headquarters and branch or sub-exchanges are located, or in which they operate.

A numeric code (see below) preceding the exchange name indicates the size of the company by total number of access lines. This is followed by statistical data relating to that exchange in parenthesis (if served by the company), and the name, address and telephone number of that company or its operating headquarters. If the operating headquarters is in another city or state, a reference is given. A reference is also provided to the company's operating group affiliation or other association by ownership or management. For additional information, see the Operating HQ or affiliate listing in the Operating Group Section.

The listing continues with exchanges served, key personnel, and line data. Various plant data includes: Sheath miles of aerial cable, underground cable (in duct), and buried cable; Conductor (pair) miles of wire for open wire, wire within aerial cable, underground (in duct), and direct buried; Coaxial cable miles; Pole line miles; Underground conduit in trench and duct miles; Toll, exchange and station carrier by number of channels and route miles; Number of microwave "hops" and channel miles.

Also shown is the purchasing responsibility and financial statistics, such as annual operating revenues, total plant investment, and construction budgets for '84, '85, '86. If furnished, REA borrowers are so identified.

An alphabetical list of companies at the end of each state gives the main exchange city under which headquarters information is shown for a company. We have attempted, as much as possible, to list companies in the states in which they operate, although in some instances, multiple state operations prevent uniformity.

1—Over 100,000 Access Lines
2—75,000 to 99,999 Access Lines
3—50,000 to 74,999 Access Lines
4—30,000 to 49,999 Access Lines
5—20,000 to 29,999 Access Lines
6—10,000 to 19,999 Access Lines
7— 7,500 to 9,999 Access Lines
8— 5,000 to 7,499 Access Lines
9— 2,500 to 4,999 Access Lines
10— 1,000 to 2,499 Access Lines
11— 750 to 999 Access Lines
12— 500 to 749 Access Lines
13—Less than 499 Access Lines

Figures following name of town or city indicate number of access lines at that place only.

AL —Access Lines
ES —Electronic
CDO—Community Dial Office
ADO—Attended Dial Office
TC —Toll Center

Non-Bell Telephone Companies Grouped According to Number of Access Lines

(NOTE: Not the Same as FCC classification of companies)

Customer Premise Equipment —Service & Supplies (Interconnects)

This section contains CPE companies—firms that sell or lease telephone terminal equipment for interconnection to telephone company lines—listed alphabetically by city within each state. Canada, Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands companies that supplied information are listed at the end of the section.

The following information was requested from each company: mailing address, telephone/telex number, company president, sales manager, number of employees, number of service personnel, sell/service data comm equipment and brands of PBXs and key systems handled. Parent Co. and its location is also listed where applicable.

The code (in parentheses) preceding the company name indicates type of company or affiliation. See below.

One year after the divestiture of AT&T, U.S. telecommunications carriers are planning to spend $23.634 billion this year. It will be an extremely busy year.

Telecommunications carriers to spend $23.634 billion in 1985

* RBOCs 1981-1983 construction budgets are adjusted to reflect divestiture.

UNITED STATES telecommunications carriers are planning equipment and construction expenditures of $23.634 billion in 1985, an increase of $1.907 billion over their actual spending levels in 1984 (Table 1).

Of the forecast amount, the regional Bell operating companies (RBOCs) will spend $14.177 billion; the Independents, $5.439 billion and the interexchange carriers, $4.018 billion.

Correlating the 1985 forecast with TELEPHONY's 1984 (Jan. 16, 1984, p. 34) forecast of $30.82 billion "for a composite telecom industry" can be done easily: The 1984 forecast contained an estimate of $8.155 billion for the voice and data communications customer premise equipment (CPE) market. Subtracting this amount from the 1984 forecast yields a figure of $22.709 billion for comparison with the 1985 forecast of $23.634 billion, which contains no estimates for CPE.

Correlating the 1985 forecast with those of the previous monopoly years is considerably more difficult but not less important. Therefore, making a correlation that provides a clearer picture of spending in the new environment required the following steps:

- Adjusting the RBOC budgets of 1981-1983 to correspond to deregulation and post-divestiture conditions.
- Including Southern New-England Telephone Co. and Cincinnati Bell with the Independents and similarly adjusting Independent spending from 1981-1984 to reflect their presence in this group.
- Grouping together the interexchange carriers and adjusting their consolidated spending from 1981-1983 to correspond to the deregulation and post-divestiture condition of AT&T Communications, formerly AT&T Long Lines.

The adjustments shed considerable light on the 1981-1983 RBOC budgets which showed a spending decrease of 18% for the period—from $16.8 billion in 1981 to an estimated $13.7 billion at the end of 1983. Actual spending in 1983 was $13 billion, reflecting an actual decrease of 23%. This decrease is, however, artificial, because it relates to a share of the budget for "customer movement" or customer premise responsibility, an area affected by deregulation.

Spending for customer movement fell from 20% of the 1981 budget to a mere 4% of the 1983 budget. Adjusting these amounts out of the 1981-1983 budgets to match post deregulation and divestiture conditions reveals that the total remaining spending for the period decreased only 7%. The adjusted spending levels for 1981-1983 respectively were $13.5 billion, $13.6 billion and $12.5 billion (Table 2).

The RBOCs spend $13.1 billion for equipment and construction during 1984, an amount that is 6% less than the forecast of $13.9 billion but a real increase of 5% over the adjusted spending level of $12.5 billion in 1983. As the RBOCs move to provide equal access and accomplish other priority objectives in 1985, spending will increase by 9% to $14.177 billion. Spending will stabilize at an estimated $14.3 billion in 1986.

Southern New England Telephone Co. and Cincinnati Bell arbitrarily have been grouped with the local exchange telephone companies that are not affiliated with post-divestiture Bell regional holding companies (RHCs). The 1981-1984 forecasts and spending levels have been adjusted to reflect their inclusion with the Independents. Based on preliminary reports, the Independents spent $4.954 billion in 1984, 12.8% less than the forecast of $5.586 billion. In 1985, Independent spending is expected to increase to $5.439 billion, still some $147 million less than the 1984 forecast amount. In 1986, Independents expect to spend $5.738 billion.

The interexchange carrier market bustled with action during 1984. The major carriers reportedly spent $500 million in a bare-knuckles advertising campaign to obtain or retain customers. Equal access became available in a few locations, providing the first real test under near-equal conditions of customer preference for a long distance company. And several hundred resellers continued their role as long distance retailers.

This forecast, however, focuses on some two dozen major interexchange carriers who already have or are constructing and expanding their own facilities. In 1984, these interexchange carriers spent $3.7 billion on digital switches, the expansion of existing microwave routes with single sideband technology, construction of new digital microwave routes, satellite facilities, fiber optic facilities and the like. The latter technology has stimulated frenzied activity, particularly with right-of-way companies like the railways, to acquire the real estate for terrestrial fiber optic links between all the major population centers in the United States.

Indeed, if all the announced fiber optic links—characterized by tremendous bandwidth—actually were to be installed, the competitive interexchange carriers might have to pay customers to make long distance calls! But there are long distances between a project announcement, installation and service availability. And the interexchange carriers, although willing to compete fiercely for customers, are unwilling to forecast spending more than $4.018 billion in 1985 (Table 1). The portion attributable to the dominant carriers is shown in Table 3.

RBOC 1984 revenues, according to preliminary reports, fell 6%—from $62.4 billion in 1983 to $58.6 billion in 1984 (Table 4). The sharp increase of $4.1 billion in RBOC operating expenses during the 1981-1983 period (Table 5) mainly is the result of transferring certain customer premise costs from the capital account to maintenance expense. The embedded CPE base has been assigned to American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (AT&T) and the net effect on RBOC operating expense for 1984 was not available for inclusion in this article. Independent operating results (Table 6) and other Independent figures still contain an unidentifiable amount for CPE. Deregulation of their CPE and its removal from the rate base is required by the end of 1987.

New days, new ways

Through these figures, 1984 emerges as a watershed year. The AT&T breakup coincided with the first real economic recovery since 1981. And the shock of divestiture was absorbed quickly, at least by the top management of the new regional Bell holding companies and AT&T—a fact that easily might be overlooked by focusing on some of the troublesome aspects of the transition.

The RHCs, indeed, pulled out all the promotional stops, seemingly intent on swiftly propelling the United States into the information age. The network connection or gateway, of course, was to be the RBOCs. And the various lines of business, though structurally separated from the RBOCs, would nurture that connection.

The main target of this powerful promotional campaign was not the subscriber user but investors. The RHCs have placed top priority on guarding their financial flanks—a fact solidly substantiated both by operating results and the forecast.

In place behind all the promotional fervor are very tight financial controls and the priority projects are those that will maintain or increase revenues. This means business customers, especially the highly-visible large businesses which usually are clustered in small geographic areas. The RBOCs are bringing high-capacity digital services to their premises.

In the Midwest, for example, some $840 million of Ameritech's 1985 construction budget of $1.8 billion will be spent on fiber optic and T-carrier facilities—a 60% increase over the $500 million spent in 1984. The percentage of digital switches in Ameritech's territory will increase from 3% currently to 31% in 1986; in the Bell Atlantic region, from 5% to 32%. And in Southern Bell's fast-growing region, the percentage of digital switches will increase from 3% in 1983 to 19% in 1985. Obviously, the RBOCs are installing technology where it counts the most.

New York Telephone, for example, derives 25% of its revenues from 1% of its business customers. Some 400 of the company's largest business customers and 5% of the next largest businesses account for approximately 70% of New York Tel's revenues. The company's territory includes lower Manhattan where the largest number of business customers are concentrated and the possibility of bypass is greatest. To serve them, New York Tel introduced packet switching in 1984, completed its fiber ring around Manhattan in 1983 and its video ring for both data and video in 1984. A 4 Mb/s (megabits per second) fiber optic facility also serves customers who need this kind of capacity.

ifornia market as though it were a new mother lode. And indeed, it is: If California were an independent nation, its economy would rank eighth on the world scale—just behind Italy and ahead of Canada. A total of 91% of its population lives in cities; approximately 20% of its over-25 residents have completed at least 4 years of college and 1 in 10 households already has a home computer.

To work this new "mine," Pacific Bell consumed half of AT&T's 1982 fiber optical production to construct a network for use during the Olympic games. But the game plan for this network extended far beyond the games: It now serves the major universities and businesses in the area and the company had 150 high capacity transport services (1.544 Mb/s networks) in operation at the end of 1984.

The RBOCs and the Independents (Table 7) are well on the way to fully digital networks. Unlike the RBOCs, Independents mainly are free to compete in the interexchange markets. Virtually every major Independent—GTE companies are a special case, because GTE acquired SPRINT from Southern Pacific—is competing or plans to compete for a share of this lucrative market. Typical of the announced plans are United Telecom's nationwide fiber optic network, the regional network of RCI, a Rochester Telephone Co. subsidiary and the regional network of LCI Communications, Inc., a company in which Alltel and Centel have a majority interest.

The five largest Independents (Table 1) account for 70% of Independent construction expenditures during the 1981-1986 period. Of their total 1985-1986 budgets, 51% will be spent for central office equipment, 33% for digital central office switches (Table 8).

For the RBOCs, the digital switching transition began later than it did for the Independents but RBOC progress is substantial. Before the decade ends, digital switches will be in place in every key location, whether RBOC or Independent.

Present but individually invisible in all of these figures are the more than 1400 small Independent telephone companies. While the RBOCs and the large Independents have upped the stakes for any local network competitor or competing technology, these small Independents are playing grass roots America cards, the only cards they hold. Few of the small companies are directly threatened by bypass competition but all of them are affected indirectly. And the expected erosion of their revenue streams, as competition drives long distance toll pricing toward cost, concerns them mightily.

The result is that potential bypassers who may be attracted to alternate technologies must make some hard choices. The RHCs, RBOCs and large Independents can and will deploy whatever technology is needed to retain business customers and the small Independents will create local or national political flurries or storms to deter any mass exodus from the local exchange network. This convergence of interests between the large and small companies is the major impetus behind the recent United States Telephone Assn.'s "unity" statement to which approximately 1250 companies already have subscribed.

Regulators, too, must come to terms with an industry that has its own ideas of how far and how fast prices can be driven to costs and, more importantly, who should pay for what.

Meanwhile, the RHCs, the RBOCs and the large Independents are competing with others and each other in many areas such as the sale of CPE, software, consulting services and the like. Multi-tenant services, for example, could become a billion dollar market by 1990 with both Independents and RHCs emerging as major players. In this submarket, pragmatism will triumph over principle. Both RBOCs and Independent telephone operating companies usually define multi-tenant services as invasions of franchised territory. Parent holding companies, however, have no qualms over directing a revenue stream into other channels if the alternative is losing it altogether.

"New" residential information services such as videotex, telebanking, teleshopping and the like continue to be long on promises and short on commercial fulfillment. Indeed, market performance figures are closely guarded secrets. But the appearance of such services usually is attended with great fanfare and followed by a deafening silence that says it all. Pilot projects are costly and pioneers are not storming this new frontier. The RBOCs, however, are making a strong case before the FCC for providing a local packet switched network and protocol conversion as a basic rather than fully-separated service.

Such a network service, they argue, is a prerequisite for home information services to become economically viable. The FCC has granted a waiver, permitting certain X.25- and X.75-based services but has delayed action on other important aspects of the waiver petition.

Videoconferencing is another service for which hopes are as high as the risks. Isacomm, Inc., a United Telecom company, for example, is investing approximately $20 million up front in its video conferencing product called "The Meeting Channel." The company's senior vice president, Anthony F. Zalenski, recently demonstrated the system to TELEPHONY and explained its relation to other United projects—the shared-tenant venture with Olympia & York and the nationwide fiber optic network. According to Zalenski, United's fiber optic network will lower video transmission costs at the same time the shared-tenant operations are expanding the number of video conferencing rooms.

This, complemented by current sales to very large companies and the advent of desk-top facilities, is expected to make videoconferencing a viable commercial service.

Cellular is now

Unlike new information services whose promises must be left for the future to judge, cellular mobile radio service is available now. The RHCs, the Independents, the radio common carriers (RCCs) the specialized common carriers (SCCs) and a host of other entrepreneurs were quick to recognize a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

When the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it would license only two providers—a wireline company and a non-wireline company—in each cellular metropolitan serving area (MSA), results were swift. Competing wireline applicants quickly formed alliances. And the FCC's lottery authority prodded the balky non-wireline applicants toward similar alliances.

In the top 30 MSAs, virtually all of the wireline systems and half of the non-wireline systems were in operation as 1984 ended. (Table 9.) In the 31-60 MSAs, all of the wireline systems are expected to be operational by the end of 1985 along with many systems in the 61-90 MSAs. The non-wireline systems in these markets will follow the same pattern, although some delays may occur in areas where applicants are slow to reach an accommodation.

The top 30 MSAs, many believe, constitute approximately 65% of the total cellular market. If the estimate is accurate, it suggests that the 31-90 market is less attractive and that a below-90 market may not exist. The answers lie in the economic realities of production and consumption: How far will equipment prices fall, once the top markets have justified mass production? When will calling traffic increase sufficiently to justify substantial price reductions which, in turn, will stimulate increased calling and so on? There are no easy answers to these cellular questions.

Nor are there any easy telecommunications answers, if "easy" means a return to the stable ways of the former monopoly. Change, to compound the cliche, is upsetting!

And even the monopoly's critics occasionally seem to be longing for the good old days.

This review and forecast, however, does not contain a nostalgia factor. The figures supplied by the carriers are sufficiently "self-checking" to make them authoritative. They reveal that competition, the objective that led to upsetting the old ways, is working, albeit imperfectly. Nevertheless, the market forces of supply and demand are more or less visible in all market segments.

The local exchange segment, for example, is a bastion of conservative management. In the years before and after divestiture, both RBOC and Independent budgets exceeded actual spending levels. Obviously, their budgets are not blank checks but a quantitative means of identifying and classifying potential projects. Just as obviously, continuous monitoring of the budgets is bringing projects into near-real-time alignment with demand. Projects that can be deferred are being deferred. Consequently, spending is less than the budgeted amount.

The risk inherent in this process is the temptation to defer projects that really ought to be done. In 1985, such projects likely have higher priority and actual spending more closely may match budgeted amounts.

Nevertheless, the local exchange forecasts reveal a mature telecommunications network. There are no signs of explosive growth, runaway demand or the early emergence of significant new revenue streams. Instead, there are tight financial controls and a steady stream of rate increase requests before the appropriate regulatory bodies.

The business plan is clear: Minimize costs. Maximize revenues. Bombard the court and the regulators with requests for waivers to every condition that puts the local exchange network at a competitive disadvantage and, through separate subsidiaries, pursue opportunities forbidden to the RBOCs.

Even in the partially deregulated interexchange market segment, no carrier is pinning its hope for success on market growth alone. Each one expects a share of the growth, of course, but the primary objective is a greater share of AT&T Communications' market. AT&T's objective is keeping its market share and shedding its competitive handicap. The Independents who are planning regional networks that include their own local exchanges have reduced their risks while increasing their chances of success: Much of their locally generated toll traffic will flow to the regional network.

tion is not new, have a well-defined carrier market of some $23.634 billion. However, this glittering target has attracted worldwide competitors as a flame attracts moths. For many products, therefore, competition has created a buyer's market.

The fierce competition for the CPE segment, for example, has lowered prices to the hang-on-for-dear-life level. The RBOCs have rejuvenated Centrex, making it competitive in features and price with PABXs. And the mass media has been filled with retailer ads, aimed at moving a stagnant inventory of telephones, cordless phones and the like off their shelves. Central office digital switches have been offered at a price-per-line that is reminiscent of the years-ago rule of thumb for step-by-step systems.

Telecommunications competition clearly is going about its business: Except where regulation says otherwise, competition is driving prices toward costs and shifting costs to cost causers. It is challenging projects, comparing them with demand, approving some and deferring others. It is redistributing market share and shifting some responsibilities to the customer. It is creating and closing markets, evaluating suppliers (Table 10) and correcting over- and undersupply. And it is challenging the traditional players as well as new entrepreneurs.

Whether or not telecommunications ought to be doing all these things and whether or not the new order ultimately will be better than the old are questions open to debate. Meanwhile, telecommunications is doing them, and though inexperienced, doing them quite well. □

THE WORLD's 1985 telecommunications spending plans mirror the state of the world's economy and the collision of priorities within and between nations.

In developed countries, balancing the conflicts between procurement, industrial policy and non-tariff protectionism requires diplomatic skills far beyond those needed to simultaneously balance tea and cake.

In the under-developed and developing countries, declining raw material prices and high interest rates continue to frustrate their hopes and optimistic plans. For some nations, the loans that were rescheduled during the financial crises of 1981-1983 are coming due in today's earnings; for others, the choice often comes down to food, not phones.

The $79.2 billion world spending plans (Table 1) reflect tight management controls at companies and PTT administrations throughout the world.

For comparison, Table 1 also provides an interesting contrast: The three left-hand columns contain the real-world data furnished to TELEPHONY by the companies and PTTs responsible for the major share of the expenditures. The two right-hand columns show what the figures would have to be to match forecasts which assert that world telecom capital expenditures are growing annually at a rate of 6% or more, expressed in 1983 dollars.

And the data furnished to TELEPHONY is uniquely current. More than 80%—38 of the 43 non-North American carrier expenditures (Table 2, Column A)—are based on verified reports made in January 1985. Some reports were made less than two weeks prior to the date of this issue of TELEPHONY.

The exchange rates (Column C) correspond to U.S. Federal Reserve system rates on the first business day of the year—the same rates that apply to cable transfers payable in foreign currency. The inflation rate of 3.7% (Column B) corresponds to the increase in the U.S. gross national product deflator for 1984.

This methodology is necessary, because the U.S. dollar is the world's main trading currency and main currency reserve. The $79.2 billion world spending forecast is, therefore, a bottom-line figure that can be inflated or deflated to suit various perceptions of monetary value. Venezuela's devaluation, for example,

Sovereign nations indeed reserve and exercise the right to define terms and to concentrate on checking inflation or making an extraordinary effort to maintain growth. The following typical examples illustrate how this works out for telecommunications capital expenditures:

- Austria spent AS10.204 million ($610.7 million) in 1983, AS10.927 million ($561.1 million) in 1984 and estimates 1985 spending at AS12.435 million ($588 million.) Six percent real growth would have required 1984 expenditures of AS13.072 million ($671.3 million) and 1985 expenditures of AS16.437 million ($737.6 million.)
- Telebras (Brazil) will maintain expenditures of $850 million to $900 million, although the cruzeiro fell from the 1983 rate of 252.670 per U.S. $1.00 to 3184.0 per U.S. $1.00 on the first business day of 1985. Had Telebras failed to maintain a level of parity, its purchasing power would have fallen from $908 million in 1983 to $72 million in 1985.
- India's Rs26.550 billion program for 1980-1985 equals $2.8 billion in 1983 dollars, $2.5 billion in 1984 dollars and $2.2 billion in 1985 dollars.

For most countries, concern over the health of current accounts has superseded wishful thinking, because deficits must be paid in foreign currency. And the options for generating foreign currency are few. For many developing countries, the main or only source of foreign currency is tourism, but there aren't enough tourists to go around.

For many countries, payments on rescheduled loans will constrain telecommunications spending plans for several years. The World Bank and other development agencies cannot offer salvation. Though the World Bank has never had a default, it enjoys a luxury not available to commercial lenders: No further loans are given until outstanding loans are current. Money for development is, therefore, dependent on commercial lenders and supplier credits. And lenders are cautious, lest they become captive to the borrower.

Those who preside over the telecommunications networks of developing countries also are entering 1985 cautiously. The two factors that influence their telecommunications development, raw material prices and interest rates, are beyond their control.

Depressed earnings offer little hope that the extraction-based economy countries can do more than concentrate on their highest priority projects. Even Saudi Arabia, which has invested some $5 billion in its network, will be taking a closer look at priorities as the need to develop non-oil dependent industrial sectors increases in importance.

Many major projects have been postponed and lower priority projects cancelled as the international debt crisis continues to plague Latin America. At the height of the crisis, the Inter-American Development Bank estimates that total debt for 20 Latin American countries represented 202% of export revenues. Debt service was 53%. The traditional rule of thumb for manageable debt service was 20%. Telecommunications remains high on the development agenda as a support to expansion of the business sector but the fiscal squeeze is on. Brazil has had to divert funds to other sectors and installations have fallen from a peak of 1 million lines annually in the 1970s to about half this number. Chile, too, is hard-pressed to meet its goal of 622,000 lines over 1982-1989. Peru has reorganized its former government agency into a corporation with a mandate to operate as a commercial enterprise. Costa Rica's network ranks among the best in the region: Installation of 50,000 digital lines began in 1984 and the goal is 5% average annual growth.

In Africa, the Republic of South Africa accounts for 43% of the continent's 8 million telephones; Egypt, Kenya, Libya, Morocco, Nigeria, Tunisia and Zimbabwe account for 80% of the remainder.

Falling oil prices interrupted Nigeria's plan to double to 290,000 the number of telephone lines. It has negotiated repayment of $365 million of central office equipment purchases that began in the late 1970s. Payments will be spread over 6 years, with a 2-year grace period that began this year. The PTT does have a tentative agreement to purchase $171 million of switching equipment. It hinges on a loan guarantee by the export credit agency of Italy, where most of the equipment for Nigeria has been manufactured.

Morocco's allocation of $250 million over the 1981-1985 period to achieve its goal of 3 lines per 100 inhabitants by 1990 seems low. But it is significant, given the region's situation. Telephone growth in South Africa has been constrained to 5% annually. It plans to double the trunk line infrastructure by 1988. About 70,000 subscribers were served by digital exchanges by the end of 1984 and teletex is being extended throughout the country.

Collectively, the least developed countries in Africa have approximately 500,000 telephones. Plans call for the number to increase to almost 4 million by the year 2000. Achieving this goal will require average expenditures of $350 million annually through 1983-2000. Emphasis currently is on the interexchange network.

Botswana has on order a $22.5 million digital telephone and radio network. Cameroon will install a $3 million microwave link to establish a backbone trunk network between its southwest and northwest provinces. The Lome (Togo)-based Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) is nearing completion of its first major project, Intelcom 1. Four links running from Ghana to Upper Volta, Benin to Upper Volta, Nigeria to Niger and Mali to the Ivory Coast, are expected to be in place this year. The $45 million Intelcom II phase will link Senegal, Gambia, Guinea Bissau and Guinea. Establishing automatic telephone and telex links between the 16 capital cities of the ECOWAS member nations will improve business communications capability and toll revenues.

Toll networks represent a source of foreign currency as well as business communications capability. For example, Philippines Long Distance Telephone, which services the major share of the country's local network, generates 70% of its revenues from toll and 50% of toll from international calls. These dollar earnings help finance large scale projects.

However, funds generated by telecommunications may be diverted to other projects. The priorities in many countries are health and education, water and power utilities and roads. This, combined with tariff structures that do not cover the cost of basic service, does little to encourage the success of proposed self-help, rotating funds for telecommunications development. Such funds, which would be used when traditional sources such as the World Bank are unable to provide loans, would rely on repayment from the future profits of new systems.

The telecommunications problem of the high technology countries is free—or freer—trade. In the United States, the breakup of AT&T has opened up new opportunities for the major supplier-nations of Europe, Asia and North America. The regional Bell operating companies (RBOCs) and their parent organizations, the regional holding companies (RHCs), now are the largest open telecommunications markets in a world where few such markets are truly open to international trade. Naturally, the U.S. is pressuring its major trading partners—like Japan—to reciprocate.

All of the countries with mature telecommunications networks also have to come to terms with liberalization. The relentless pressure to do so comes mainly from the customer that cannot be ignored—the business users. They, of course, are the sources of the most revenue and profit for all carriers.

In the United Kingdom, for example, 300 corporations generate 45% of business user revenues in the country. Nor is the 20/80 rule, where 20% of the customer-base generates 80% of dollars, unique to Britain or the United States. The 900 firms that constitute West Germany's major business user group generate almost a third of the country's telecommunications revenues. These users are the movers and shakers of telecommunications demand.

The United Kingdom also is reaping the benefits of privatization—some $4.7 billion from last year's sale of shares of British Telecom. The government retained 49.8% control of the company and will benefit from future profits and tax revenues. When it was wholly-owned by the government, British Telecom paid no taxes. This year's tax bite will be close to $600 million. Revenues rose to $4.1 billion, up 11% from $3.8 billion the previous first-half. The sale also helped dispel a PTT concern that privatization might leave shares begging in the market. British Telecom's sale was so successful it attracted three times the amount of cash that could be accommodated.

Japan, now committed to the privatization of NTT and substantial liberalization, faces some harsh decisions as the largest national market in the combined Asia-Pacific region and the region's largest supplier. Nippon Telegraph and Telephone's (NTT) expenditures leveled at the Yen 1.7 trillion in 1980. Other countries in the region, such as Australia, Korea and Taiwan, have strong demand and the beginnings of competitive telecommunications manufacturing industries. Hong Kong and Singapore satisfy most of their requirements with imported technology. These two major service centers, however, have very sophisticated requirements and enviable bargaining positions.

The Philippines has embarked on an ambitious program to add 3 million lines to satisfy 100% of demand by the year 2000. The first phase of the program is underway in Metro Manila. Indonesia plans to add 750,000 lines to its network. Malaysia's $254 million 5-year plan ends this year. But the stars of the region are Korea, Thailand and Taiwan, which will add a total of 5,642,000 new lines over 1986-1988. (Table 3).

Taiwan's 25% annual growth rate in the 1970s has leveled out at 12%. The number of lines has increased from 1 million in 1975 to 5.3 million in 1984. 1986-1995 plans call for investment of $2.5 billion (T$100 billion) to cope with continuing strong voice demand and surging demand for data communications. Work has began on realization of the country's ISDN.

Taiwan's development goals include increasing local switch digitization from 1% of 5.8 million lines in 1985 to 31% of the 7.3 million lines projected for 1990; all of the 10 million lines projected for the year 2000 will be digital. Current plans call for installing 400,000 new lines in 1985 and accelerating to 550,000 annually by 1990. Replacement lines will go from 34,000 in 1985 to 321,000 by 1990. By 1990, 82% of the toll switches and 88% of toll circuits will be digital, with 100% digitization by 1998. Approximately 44% of the local trunk circuits will be digital by 1990, with 100% digital capability by the year 2000.

The Korean Telecommunications Authority (KTA) is an outstanding success story. KTA recently began installing 1 million new lines annually, a pace it expects to maintain through 2001, the year it expects to have 22 million lines in service. The current network has 6.3 million lines compared with only 2 million lines in 1978. KTA's $6.5 billion program is 71% internally-funded; 54% derived from revenues with an additional 17% from revenues earned by tariff increases (Figure 1). It has national priority, investment will account for 7.5% of total government investment over 1982-1988. By comparison, telecommunications investment to total investment averages 3%-4% in continental Europe. Cellular mobile service was introduced in the Seoul area during 1984 and subscribers reached 2700 by the end of the year. Service is expected to be nationwide by 1991. Teletex and videotex will be introduced in 1986. Teletex will be in service with 7000 initial circuits, increasing to 152,000 by 1996 and 544,000 in 2001. Videotex service will increase from 2500 initial circuits to 32,000 by 1996 and 75,000 by 2001. DACOM, a subsidiary of KTA, began commercial data service in 1983 and began offering international electronic mail service in Korean and English during 1984. ISDN plans are underway and fiber optic routes are expected to cover 49% of the trunk network by 1991.

These "snapshots" of substantial telecommunications progress in spite of the problems are important: They are the brighter side of the struggle to stay even. And, in every case, progress is directly linked to the priority given telecommunications in a country's development plan. The message is clear: For years to come, telecommunications development will be measured not solely by how much money is available but by how purposefully and wisely available money is spent. □
